

Embrace the new mood of vibrant patterns

Design Dilemma Liz Dwyer

Pattern and prints are back. Here's how to work them into a room

If September's Maison et Objet (the influential European interior trade show) was anything to go by, maximalism is the way forward and pattern and prints the new neutrals," says Liza Marconi, co-founder of Dust Design. "Graphic prints and pattern are still quite a scary prospect for most Irish homeowners, especially as we've spent so long pairing everything back and embracing Scandi minimalism, it's hard to break rank and start throwing in loads of chevrons, cubes and retro motifs," says Marconi.

But if you are ready to embrace the new mood of vibrant patterns, Marconi and Sarah Drum, the other half of Dust have a few design rules they always pass on to clients.

First up, pick a pallet with a few colours and use it for all your print choices. Next use more than one type of print and layer them up, so if using a floral add a geometric.

Always play with scale, if using a large zig zag, then add a smaller wave pattern into the scheme and lastly pick up a colour from the pattern elsewhere in the room with a plainer accessory or piece of furniture.

"Pattern can be woven in through loads different mediums: a brave choice would be a full room of wallpaper, like the bird hexagon paper we used recently in a Drumcondra living room, but for many this can be too much. Feature walls have pretty much had their day but a more modern approach would be to paper under the dado rail with a bold pattern and then keep the rest of the room white," says Drum.

Another safe way to introduce geometrics is through a bold rug and then layer up the patterns with throw cushions. "This worked really well on a recent project in Donnybrook, where a Mission-style rug made to measure by Rug Art and a few fun cushions, really added zing and colour to the neutral room."

If trying to source patterned rugs Marconi recommends Rug Art, West Elm and Rocket St George and for finding fun cushions she loves Made.com, Society 6 and Missoni. If you just want to dip your toes in the pattern pond, Drum suggests experimenting with a few prints from graphic artists like Camille Walala or for a budget option you can pick up prints from sites such as zippi.co.uk. for a little as a tenner, says Marconi. dust.ie

Pieces of Me Karl O'Hanlon

Glam-rock style in French château

Liz Dwyer

Irish property developer describes his signature style as rustic, country French with varying degrees of château glam

Dubliner Karl O'Hanlon is a developer, hotelier and interior designer who specialises in restoring and operating wine estates and historic French buildings.

O'Hanlon graduated from UCD in 1993, with a degree in philosophy and politics, before going on to study European politics and society at Oxford University.

While working in finance in London and Dublin, O'Hanlon satisfied his more creative side by doing a diploma in interior design. In the early noughties, he took on a side project restoring boutique properties in the south of France, a process he enjoyed so much it eventually morphed into his development company, Domaine & Demeure.

He moved to Languedoc in France permanently in 2006 with his wife Anita and their three children.

The couple opened their first estate, Château Les Carrasses, in 2011. Château St Pierre de Serjac, a 19th-century stronghold, was their next renovation project, and the place where the family now lives and runs a hotel and spa.

Their third restoration resort venture, Château Capitoul, is scheduled for completion in early 2020.

Describe your interiors style?

In our work we always try to create interiors that clients and guests will love and what suits the building or situation, rather than what we necessarily love ourselves. But I suppose our signature style is kind of rustic, country French with varying degrees of château glam and a touch of rock 'n' roll – comfort-ble and chic.

Which room do you most enjoy and why?
I love the salon at Château Les Carrasses, where the grapes were once brought in from the harvest then dropped through the floor into the vats below. Today it's the reception, the restaurant and the heart and soul of the estate, especially in winter. I particularly love the original vaulted roof, which we just sandblasted back, and the 19th-century steel pillars.

What items do you love the most and why?
The thing I love most in our own house is a 19th-century Italian basket chandelier, which I found in pieces in a box at an antique fair and which my daughter Cara restored, along with lots of other pieces for St Pierre. Our buying trips to the antique fairs and to Indonesia will be lifelong memories for me and I hope for her. She wants to be a jewelry designer, and has had a lot of practice restoring chandeliers to feed her fashion addiction.

Who is your favourite designer? Do you own any of their work?
I particularly love 19th-century and pre-war 20th-century design – especially mirrors, chandeliers, Art Nouveau and pre-war Métiers style. We've got a few nice things, mostly unsigned. For contemporary design I really admired David Collins – his restaurant and bar interiors set a totally new standard, and his work definitely served as an inspiration for the hotel at Château St Pierre de Serjac.

I also love Brian McGuigan's furniture at Orior in Newry – we have a pair of Thurman couches which will last forever.

What would you save from a fire?
Wife, kids, dog. Nothing else is worth the risk.

Your favourite gadget or machine?

I particularly love 19th-century and pre-war 20th-century design – especially mirrors, chandeliers, Art Nouveau and pre-war Métiers style

Definitely Rainette (French for "little green frog"), our robot lawnmower. Like a friendly little electric dog, she's the sixth member of the family. Gets loads done, never complains. Occasionally digs unnecessary holes.

Do you collect anything specific?
Rock photography – I got tipped off by my friend Mark Overton, who owns the Off Beat Lounge gallery in Norwich. I also have a collection of vintage cocktail shakers, picked up at antique fairs over the years. I love the look of them, and the call-back to the 1920s and 1930s. You can't use them though – everything tastes of silver polish.

Which artist do you most admire?
There are so many. Dalí, Gaudí, Haussmann, Frank Lloyd Wright, Francis Ford Coppola, Steinbeck, Pininfarina and countless others. Bob Dylan most of all though.

The biggest interiors turn-off for you?
Different colour chairs of the same style. And fake books are an epic fail.

Your favourite travel destination and why?

Indonesia for both work and holidays. We get a lot of our furniture made there, and the trips to the factories are always great. I love the people, the landscape, the food is terrific, amazing beaches and great surf.

What does home mean to you?
Ireland will always be home, but having been here for so long France has become home too, and the Languedoc has become a part of who we are. The heart is in both now I guess.

If you had €100,000 to spend, what would you buy?
Anita wants me to work less and have more fun, so probably an Alfa [Romeo] Spider duetto from the late 1960s. The most beautiful car and only a little bit mid-life crisis. There'd be plenty of change to pay for the towing.

Thinking pink, even in the kitchen

Home Front

Contrasting colours are being used to accentuate elements in the kitchen – or to distinguish between wall and base units

Hot colours

Colour popping isn't just about chucking a few brightly-painted cushions around and hoping for the best. According to the UK kitchen company Kestrel, colour is becoming a hotter and hotter topic in kitchen design.

Five years ago everyone wanted the all-over natural oak look: now, though, contrasting colours are being used to accentuate certain elements of the room, such as the island, or even to distinguish between wall and base units. And yes, folks, that means more than one colour. Current customer favourites include citrus tones, classic navy and – inevitably – muted greys.

However, predictions for 2018 are divided. Will it be the year of metallic and dark shades, or calming pastel hues?

Nobody knows. What's certain, however, is that a delicious design palette is going to be on the kitchen menu for the foreseeable future. kestrelfurniture.com

Witty in pink

This has been the year when pink went ironic and, in the guise of "millennial pink", was transformed into everything from rose gold eyelash curlers to Pantone's pale dogwood paint, "a quiet and peaceful shade that engenders an aura of innocence and purity".

Pink without the prettiness? Don't make us laugh. One of these days, millennial pink will be consigned to the same dusty region of interiors history as avocado bathroom suites. In the meantime, we've fallen for this candy pink radiator which might just make you smile. It's from the UK radiator specialists Bisque: classic style, the colour is called Rose. Now it has opened a second showroom on Maple Avenue, Stillorgan: 500sq m of cool, calm kitchen heaven, showing off its expertise with leading international design brands Siematic and Ligne Roset.

"Since establishing Arena Kitchens in 1987," says sales director David Rafters, "we have worked hard to be the luxury kitchen design centre of excellence in Ireland. During our 30 years in business, we have learned from some of the leading upscale quality design brands in the world. The new showroom in Maple Avenue is state of the art for technology and kitchen design."

The showroom is also home to such top-notch names as Wolf Subzero, Gaggenau, Miele, Blanco, Quooker and Dornbracht. For further information or to make an appointment to visit the showroom, see arenakitchens.com

Sofa beds for welcome guests

A good sofa bed is hard to find. We all know about the bad ones – too saggy to sleep on, too slippery to relax on – but Michael Murphy Home Furnishings has a collection of high-quality day beds in streamlined contemporary shapes. They're designed to transform your livingroom into a guest room with one click, a set of bedlinen and a spot of hasty tidying.

And with the store's double discount sale currently on, they're offering great value too. The Studio sofa bed is priced at €349 (down from €599) while the Square is €649 (down from €949) and the Bernardo is €849 (€1,299). michaelmurphy.ie
